High Tide In The Korean War: How An Outnumbered American Regiment Defeated The Chinese At The Battle Of Chipyeong-ni

Synopsis

By early 1951, American forces and their UN allies had been driven more than 100 miles down the Korean peninsula by the Chinese. The situation was bleak when Gen. Matthew Ridgway ordered a last stand at the village of Chipyeong-ni. There a single regiment (the 23rd Infantry) of fewer than 5,000 U.S. soldiers defeated a Chinese division of 25,000 men in what has been called the Gettysburg of the Korean War. Page-turning history of one of the most important battles of the Korean War. From-the-foxhole account of a do-or-die defense. Draws from memoirs, interviews, unit reports, intelligence summaries, and personal research in South Korea.

Excellent book. I read Mr. Leo Barron's two other books (they can be found in) and this one is just as great as the previous books. The information is easy to follow and I can imagine the battle and events unfolding in my mind as I read. The book is straight to the point so my time is not wasted. My father fought in the Korean War and my mother and her family took refuge from Pyong-Yang during the war so I have a personal appreciation for the book as there are so few books written about the Korean War. I would recommend this to all Koreans that want to learn about our history that helped shaped South Korea to what it is today. This is a wonderful book and it took three days to finish reading because I had a difficult time putting it down. Great purchase.

A great and in-depth-study about an unknown battle in an unknown war. I like the modern approach to the subject and the way Barron is able to explain the very complicated fighting in a very detailed, yet clear way. It was like the Chinese were creeping up next to my seat. I read the last 150 pages in one go.

Excellent writing about one of the fiercest battles in early part of the war the us army in this battle like they did in vietnam made history.

An informative read on a little known but critical battle of the Korean War.
