In any case, creators of low-carb items regularly incorporate another box by the food name that has data on the net carb substance of the food. The net starch substance is intended to mirror the measure of sugars the item contains that will bring about glucose levels to rise, a key element in low-starch eating methodologies, for example, Atkins. There is no legitimate meaning of net carbs. That is their math. They have an equation about how the quantity of grams of carbs don't check the way you think they would tally. In ascertaining the net starch content, numerous food organizations subtract the quantity of grams of dietary fiber and different sugars, for example, glycerin and sugar alcohols from the quantity of aggregate carbs recorded in the marks for food truth. Customer Reviews

This reads as if the author wrote it in German then translated it to Russian, then Vietnamese, then Navajo, then back to German then finally English. I could get over that nonsense but this is supposed to be low carb. The first couple of recipes he wants you to use honey, bananas, and regular caramel! Is he kidding me?!
