French Canadians, Furs, And Indigenous Women In The Making Of The Pacific Northwest

Synopsis

Jean Barman rewrites the history of the Pacific Northwest from the perspective of French Canadians involved in the fur economy, the indigenous women whose presence in their lives encouraged them to stay, and their descendants. For half a century, French Canadians were the region's largest group of newcomers, facilitating early overland crossings, driving the fur economy, initiating non-wholly-indigenous agricultural settlement, and easing relations with indigenous peoples. When the region was divided in 1846, they also ensured that the northern half would go to Britain, giving Canada its Pacific shoreline.

French Canadians, Furs, and Indigenous Women in the making of the Pacific Northwest by Jean Barman is one of the newest and best books on information about the indigenous women who went with their mates in the rugged Fur Trade. Many Tender Ties is another book that takes a look at the women and their role with the trappers in the Northwest. The author has done extensive research and cites her sources. Wonderfully written and illustrated with maps, charts, photos, and drawings this book is delightful and reads almost like fiction. Perfect for the history buff A++++++

Its a good book/research but be advised that it is very west coast centric so if you are looking for an in depth look at the inland historical picture (like Manitoba for instance) you will not find it in great detail like you will see for Oregon and points north.

I once wrote a long essay/rant (public) on this remarkable book on my Facebook. A short Ã©pilogue was written in French. Hope this web site allow sharing URL:[...]
