Disappointed. I loved The Rosie Project. Absolutely loved it. The innate kindness and generosity of the protagonist coupled with his incredible intellect and its accompanying and hysterically funny

foibles and "deficits" made him so unique and loveable. We saw him grow and adapt in order to find, and ultimately to make the accommodations necessary to win Rosie. And in turn we loved Rosie when she made accommodations for him as well because she saw what we saw in him. Now in this book we find out she wasn't deserving of our affections, nor of his. SPOILERS ALERT--She went behind his back and got pregnant when she knew that she was married to a man who had to plan and prepare and research every aspect of his life. Then she sprung momentous life-altering news on him and had the ridiculous reaction of disappointment when his response didn't measure up to her hopes. Then she made no real effort to work with him to help him create the structured plan he needs for every aspect of his life. She did nothing to attempt to repair the damage by talking it out with him, despite her insistence that he talk to her in the first book. Then she cuts him out of her life emotionally while she prepares to cut him out of her life and their baby's life and leave the country. A country that he made the monumental personal effort to move to FOR HER. I don't think it is overstating it to say that I hated her in this book. And for that I blame the author. This should have been the book where we learn to love Rosie and she successfully navigates the perils of a life with the man she chose to marry. There should have been bumps and misunderstandings and arguments and making up and worry and turmoil, yes. Absolutely.
